

... AFTER
 ... to his flight from glory, and second ... of Holland in his sabots.

© Press Illustrating Service
 H. H. H. H.

When the strike stripped the harbor of all activity city policemen came to the rescue and ran the municipal ferries.

© Press Illustrating Service

Not only did the police do the piloting. They hauled off their coats and got busy stoking. They even took charge of the engine room.

© Press Illustrating Service

Back on the job again after the big harbor tie-up. The tugs are busy once more, and are here shown helping land a large transport loaded with troops.

© Western Newspaper Union

This is T. L. Delahunty, president of the Marine Workers' Affiliation and the moving spirit in the harbor strike.

© Underwood & Underwood

While the strike lasted the harbor and the rivers were forlorn enough stretches of water. Craft of all descriptions idly hugged the wharves.

© Press Illustrating

